This whole thing is ridiculous! I swear that these cry baby companies are just as bad as a bunch of "petty jealous women".

Has anyone ever thought that if those companies had a product as good as the Microsoft products they wouldn't have these problems?

I buy Microsoft because they are good programs--I wouldn't have Netscape on my computer and it irritates me to death to have to designate which one I want to use.

As for AOL --what a farce. People can choose whichever one they want to use from within the OS. As a matter of fact, I detest AOL as much as I do Netscape. The first thing I do when I install a new OS is go in and delete the junk about AOL, Prodigy etc--just don't want it there in my way, cluttering up my machine.

Its time for the cry babies to just get over it and produce a better product that people will want to use. Nobody forces me to use Microsoft products--I use them because I prefer them over any of the others.
